

Amy Stein, AIA Partner

Amy directs the firm’s work for significant institutional and federal projects, and those involving masterplans, building renewal and adaptive reuse. Her ability to establish a project vision and advance strategic goals among broad stakeholder groups has led to transformative projects that shape new gateway buildings for expanding programs, and redefine the value and usefulness of existing buildings. Amy is actively engaged in Philadelphia’s preservation community through her decades-long involvement as a committee member of the Historical Commission, where she has helped guide development of the city. She served on two national design juries, and has lectured at the AIA, the Society for Architectural Historians and the Delaware Valley Smart Growth Alliance. She is a graduate of Kent State and a native of Cleveland.
